

Alphabet Sinks 10% Before the Bell as Wall Street Splits Its AI Verdict From Microsoft

Data as of: 2026-10-29 07:02 ET (futures and premarket per Reuters; Asia closes and oil per AP 5:51 AM ET)

Key takeaways

1. Alphabet fell 10.4% premarket after missing revenue and ad estimates while free cash flow turned negative again.
2. Microsoft rose 2.1% on an Azure beat and a stronger revenue guide; Nasdaq 100 futures slipped 0.93%.
3. Next: Q3 GDP (Reuters poll 3.2%) and PCE at 8:30 AM, the ECB at 9:15 AM, Amazon and Intel after the close.

Today's key news

Two of the biggest AI spenders reported on the same night, and the market has picked a winner and a loser before the opening bell.

Alphabet fell 10.4% in premarket trading after revenue and advertising came in below estimates and free cash flow was negative for a second straight quarter. Microsoft rose 2.1% after Azure beat forecasts and it guided December-quarter revenue above Wall Street's number.

Because Alphabet is one of the largest weights in the Nasdaq 100, those futures slipped 0.93% while Dow futures were nearly flat. At 8:30 AM the third-quarter GDP and September PCE inflation reports add a second test: a hot reading would feed the more-than-81% odds of a December Fed hike, on top of the AI-spending doubts.

What matters today

Investors are now paying for AI returns, not AI spending

Alphabet's third-quarter revenue of $127.6 billion missed the $128.2 billion LSEG estimate, and advertising of $82 billion trailed the $83.4 billion forecast as search growth slowed (Reuters). Google Cloud more than doubled to $30.7 billion with a $561 billion backlog, but capital spending of $51.4 billion pushed free cash flow to minus $9.1 billion (company release). The company kept its 2026 capex plan at $195 billion to $205 billion and said 2027 spending will rise significantly, and its finance chief warned of near-term margin pressure (Reuters).

Microsoft spent heavily too, but showed what it is getting for it. Adjusted EPS of $4.89 beat the $4.73 estimate, free cash flow of $18.6 billion was about $10 billion above expectations, and the December-quarter revenue guide of $96.0 billion to $97.1 billion topped LSEG's $95.6 billion (Reuters). Satya Nadella told analysts the "shiny-object stuff is waning" as customers plan AI spending over a decade.

Why it matters: the split shows that investors no longer reward capex on its own; they want it matched by contracted revenue or cash flow. WMR data: Alphabet closed Wednesday at $324.89, already 19.3% below its three-month high and under its 20-day average; Microsoft was 1.9% below its high and above its 20-day average. See </en/topics/alphabet/> and </en/topics/microsoft/>.

Software takes the hit from slowing bookings

ServiceNow fell 19.6% premarket even though subscription revenue grew 21% to $3.99 billion and non-GAAP EPS was $1.00. The weak spot is the outlook: it guided current remaining performance obligations, contracted revenue due within a year, to grow 18.5% in the fourth quarter after 20.5% in the third (company release). Reuters said profit missed estimates and that Zscaler and Salesforce slipped in sympathy. Fortinet fell 26.2% after its own results.

Why it matters: software has been the group investors fear AI could disrupt, and a slowdown in bookings at a leader feeds that worry. Watch whether selling spreads from these two names to the wider software group at the open.

Industrials and drugmakers report a strong morning, with different reactions

Caterpillar's sales rose 17% to $20.7 billion and adjusted EPS jumped to $7.20 from $4.95, with Power & Energy sales up 18% on data-center demand (company release). Yet the stock fell 9.7% premarket (Reuters), a sign that a big run-up had set a high bar.

Eli Lilly gained 3.9% after revenue rose 39% to $24.4 billion and it raised its full-year revenue outlook to $91 billion to $92 billion (company release). Merck rose almost 3% after revenue of $18.1 billion and adjusted EPS of $2.49 beat LSEG estimates of $17.3 billion and $2.08 (Reuters).

Before the Bell

Futures (Reuters, 7:02 AM ET)		Change
S&P 500 E-minis		-0.2%
Nasdaq 100 E-minis		-0.93%
Dow E-minis		-0.09%
Premarket mover	Move	Why
Fortinet (FTNT)	-26.2%	Fell after Q3 results
ServiceNow (NOW)	-19.6%	Profit missed; slower Q4 cRPO guide
Alphabet (GOOGL)	-10.4%	Revenue and ads missed; cash burn widened

Premarket mover	Move	Why
Caterpillar (CAT)	-9.7%	Q3 sales +17%, adj. EPS $7.20
Carvana (CVNA)	+7.5%	Q3 revenue beat estimates
Chipotle (CMG)	+7%	Comparable sales beat expectations
Eli Lilly (LLY)	+3.9%	Revenue +39%; full-year revenue outlook raised
Microsoft (MSFT)	+2.1%	Azure beat; revenue guide above estimates

Moves as reported by Reuters at 7:02 AM ET. Chips were weaker: Intel fell 3.7%, Micron 3.3% and AMD 2.8% in earlier premarket trading (Reuters). Before the open, the 10-year Treasury yield was about 5.00%, Brent crude $110.77 (-0.8%) and WTI $101.67 (-1.1%) (AP, 5:51 AM ET).

Last call vs. what happened

What we flagged last evening	What happened	Market reaction
Microsoft's call guidance	December-quarter revenue guide $96.0B-97.1B vs. $95.6B expected; Azure growth guide 49%-50% vs. 47.6% (Reuters)	MSFT +2.1% premarket
Microsoft vs. Alphabet after the close	Microsoft beat on Azure and cash flow; Alphabet missed on revenue and ads	GOOGL -10.4% premarket; Nasdaq 100 futures -0.93%
Q3 GDP and PCE at 8:30 AM	Not yet confirmed as this edition went out	Scored in the evening report

Our three open calls for today (Q3 GDP at least 2.5%, the ECB holding at 2.50%, Microsoft closing above $531.01) are scored on the track record once results are in.

What to watch

Time (ET)	Event
8:30 AM	Q3 GDP, advance (Reuters poll 3.2%, Q2 2.2%); September personal income, spending and PCE prices
8:30 AM	Weekly jobless claims
9:15 AM	ECB decision; 70 of 73 economists in a Reuters poll expected a hold at 2.50%
After the close	Amazon (call 5:00 PM) and Intel
Fri 8:30 AM	Q3 employment cost index (BLS); Bank of Japan decision expected to hold (AP)

If-then scenarios

- If GDP comes in well above the 3.2% poll and PCE prices run hot → check: the 2-year yield and December hike odds, now above 81%
- If Alphabet's selling spreads to other AI spenders → check: Amazon and Meta at the open, and whether Microsoft holds its gain
- If Amazon's AWS growth speeds up while capex climbs → check: whether investors treat it like Microsoft or like Alphabet after hours

Not a forecast — what to check depending on the outcome.

Our calls for today (logged on the track record before the results): the Nasdaq Composite closes below Wednesday's 26,549.85; ServiceNow closes down more than 5% from Wednesday; Eli Lilly closes above Wednesday's close.
